Dissertation: Divided Loyalty: Causes and Consequences of Party and Interest Group Competition in Congressional Primaries

Committee: Wendy Schiller (chair), Paul Testa, and Susan Moffitt

Summary: The dissertation seeks to explain why outsider congressional candidates are increasingly able to compete with party-backed candidates in primary elections. Using a combination of methods, including both a traditional and a conjoint survey experiment, case studies, and quantitative analysis using original longitudinal campaign finance data, the dissertation demonstrates that growing voter distrust of parties and political institutions combined with significant changes to the campaign finance system have benefited candidates who, in previous eras, have been blocked or impeded from running for office by party leaders.
